Mr. McCullough, of the Commission, Says He Thinks It Is Correct.

James E. McCullough, a member of the Building Association Commission, was asked yesterday for a statement concerning | nothing else. It was fine sport to witness the charges made by a number of building and loan associations that the report of the commission submitted to the Governor last week is inaccurate. Mr. McCullough said that he had not had time to consider the attacks on the report made by the associ-

Mr. McCullough says the commission depended upon the printed reports of the Auditor of State in making up the tables published in its report. Mr. McCullough says the commission did not use the original reports filed by the associations, except to ascertain certain details which do not appear in the printed reports, which give the items in lump, and not in detail. For instance, the Auditor's reports may show gross expenses. but not the separate items of expense. If errors have crept into the printed reports of the Auditor, they are due to misclassification of items by the associations, and the Auditor is not responsible. Mr. McCullough says that as soon as the commission has examined the assertions of the different associations, the results will be made public, in order that no injustice may be done and so that errors, if any have been made, may be rectified.

DROWNED IN THE RIVER.

John Barrett, in Wading, Got in Too Deep and Could Not Swim Out.

John Barrett, a boy about eighteen years old, who lived at the corner of Coburn and East streets, was drowned in White river near the Morris street bridge Jesierday afternoon. This is a favorite fishing place, and many congregate there to watch the fishermen, and among them yesterday was young Barrett. There is an island in the river near this point, and Barrett, who was with some friends, spoke of wading out to it. He removed his coat and hat and entered the water with the remander of his clothing on, and started to wade to the Island, beliaving that the water was not too deep. The other boys stood and watched him wa'le he moved away from them. Suddenly they saw him disappear beneath the water, but none of them being able to swim, none dared so to his rescre, Barrett was un this to swim, and his clothing soon carried him down

The coroner was notified, and was soon on the scene. Undertaker Whitsett accompanied him with grapheoks and poles, and as the water is not very deep at this point they did not experience much trouble in locating the body. The boy was drowned at about 4 o'clock, and at 5:3) the body was recovered.

fair grounds, where the Indianapolis Driv-Grand Circuit is to be held, commencing with to-morrow. The special train from Fort Wayne, bringing in the large bunch Autumn Styles, and contains no less than of horses which have been making the circuit, arrived late in the afternoon. Quarters had been provided for every stable of horses and for every horse, and the disposal of the animals as they were carefully unloaded went off like clock work. It was not long before the place presented a very lively apearance. Horses and horsemen were everywhere. At the stables north of the track were quartered the greater number of horses, but large as these stables are they were not adequate to accommodate all, and comfortable stalls were found for a hundred or more in the exhibition stables south of the grandstand. After the day spent cramped up in a car on the road the horses were glad to find themselves again at liberty to stretch their legs. In a few instances they took the liberty before their keepers were ready for it, and in other cases they were given a little needed exercise on the track. At dusk there were few visitors at the grounds. There had been a large number out during the early afternoon in the expectation of seeing the flyers unloaded, but the most of them were disappointed, as the train was a little late. A few, however, saw them get in, and were amazed at the number of them. There are exactly 250 horses entered in the fifteen races of the week, and there is at least one other horse for each one entered that is not to be seen in competition. Some horses are, of course, on the road alone, while others are with stables of half a dozen or more. which were just released from a day's close confinement, were able to offer a see them. The standard-bred horse differs from the thoroughbred, chiefly in the submission to restraint. The latter's great value as a winner seems to come from his utter lack of regard for his jockey. It is go-as-you-please with the horses, each of which seems to know full well what is expected of him, and desires to accomplish efforts of the rider. The wisip may force on the lolterer, or it may get a little more speed out of the best, but it is seldom that the thoroughbred can be pulled.

With the standard bred much more depends upon the driver and upon the horse's submission to the driver. Thorough training is absolutely necessary for success, and it is thus that the harness horses are usually thoroughly in the control of their drivers. They are trained horses-trained, owever, only to the one trick; to keep the gait for which they are best fitted, and to get over all the ground possible in the shortest time. Naturally they are the same mettlesome creatures that are to be seen upon the running course, but long training has brought mem to submission to the will of their drivers. They are the perfection of nature and art. It is as good as assured that this week will be a record-breaking one. It is hardly expected that the great world's records will get badly smashed. They were records made under the most favorable cirsumstances, and at times when the horses were driven with that end in view, and such trotting and pacing as these horses did on the Indianapolis track two years ago, but it was not to be compared with the true sport of witnessing a race-horse against horse.

This week there come together hundreds of the fastest horses in the United States. They come together to battle for the big stakes and liberal purses, to win any one of which the owner of the horse can consider himesif amply paid for his coming here, and afford to rest on his oars during the next meeting. These horses have no particular desire to break records so long as it is not necessary to do so to win the race. They have three heats to take before they are winners of the laurels and the big purses, and cannot afford to make an exhausting spurt for the first or subsequent mile just to see how fast they can go. But they not considered then. It is in such event that the sport of horse racing to the spectators is greatest. During the several Grand Circuit meetngs which have been held this season, endng last week with Fort Wayne, very fast | far he has traveled in a day, and perspirtime has been made. He paid a bar bill of $4.20 and then went out to see the sights. He drank beer in several saloons and finally went to saloon near the haymarket, where he met two strangers. Several glasses of beer were drunk and the strangers propose that all three take a walk. Burkhardt says that as soon as they got him outsid one of them stuck a pistol in his face and the other knocked him down. They searched his pockets, all the while commenting upon the "easy thing" and the 'pudding' they had. They took nearly $20 and left him lying on the ground. Burkhardt told the police that he chased the men a short distance, but they gave him the slip. He was somewhat under the influence of drink when he called at the police station.

CHARGES LUTHER MORRIS WITH CRIMINAL ASSAULT.

by a Revolver in Morris's Hands.

The police are looking for Luther Morris, a painter who lives at 136 Columbia avenue. He is wanted on a charge of criminal assault, committed Saturday evening near the fair ground. At 9 o'clock Saturday night John Goode, Five hundred norses, the majority of that his twelve-year-old daughter had been assaulted by Morris. He said that Morris was well acquainted with the family and little amusement to those who waited to that Saturday he drove by the house and took the little girl for a ride. This was about 5 o'clock. At 7 o'clock the girl returned with the story that Morris had assaulted her in the wood further up the road | and that two men had driven him away. Before the girl's arrival Morris had stopped at Goode's house and left his card (there being no one at home), on which he and two hoodlums had threatened to kill

> The two men whom Morris referred to as hoodlums were farmers living beyond Mr. reached home and they told what they saw, which, if true, is enough to make a serious case against Morris. They say that when they saw what was being done and attempted to interfere Morris drew a revolver and threatened to shoot them. One of the farmers accompanied Mr. Goode to the city Saturday night prepared to swear out a warrant for the arrest of Morris. The police directed them to a justice of the peace, and at the same time set about a search for Morris with the intention of arresting him without the formality of a warrant if he could be found. He formerly lived on Greenwood street and the police looked for him in that neighborhood, but were unable to find him. Last night it was learned that he had moved to 136 Columbia avenue and Sergeant Lowe called there. Morris's wife informed the officer that her husband had not been at home for two or three days. She said he had taken her horse and buggy, saying that he was going to see about a contract on which he was figuring. She had not seen him since that time, and was uneasy lest something had befallen him. No trace of Morris or the horse and buggy has been found, though it is believed Morris drove direct to this city Saturday evening.

The National Democrats find their chief difficulty in the disposition manifested by Democrats who believe in sound money to "shoot straight at the mark" by voting for McKinley. This is particularly true in Maryland and Nebraska, where they fear that a third ticket will injure the cause of sound money rather than help it. The Maryland Sound-money League, at its meeting the other day, decided not to elect delegates, but to send John E. Semmes to represent the State. Chairman Bynum wired Mr. Semmes in reply that if he was unwilling to call a convention, they would have to call one through other sources. The call for the national convention was carefully worded and invites the co-operation of those who favor putting another ticket in the field, so there is not likely to be any question before the convention as to whether or not it shall nominate.

Mr. Pickens, chairman of the National Democratic State committee, will call his new committee together to-morrow. It will decide the question of whether or not there shall be a State ticket in the field and will fix the dates and places for the district meetings to elect delegates to the National a well-to-do farmer living on the Millers- convention in September.
